

Journey Into Mohawk Country

Nonfiction Films

House of Peace

A documentary about Ganondagan, a Seneca living in Western New York in the 1600s, and the transformation of his home into a New York Historic Site.

The Northeast: Give and Take

In this documentary, descendants of the Mohawk, Seneca, Oneida, Penobscot, Iroquois, and Wampanoag tribes discuss their past. Tribe members discuss the Iroquois Confederacy and their ancestors' history before the time of colonists.

Honorable Nations

Set in Salamanca, N.Y., the only city in the U.S. to be owned by Native Americans, this documentary discusses when the lease on Salamanca to the U.S. government ran out and what happened to its residents.

In the Land of War Canoes

This film documents the life and times of the Kwakiutl tribe in British Columbia, Canada. In an attempt to recreate life before white settlers, this film features authentic costumes, dance and rituals all in the Kwakiutl tradition.

Fiction Films

Rain in the Mountains

Eric, a native, tries to convince his family and friends to return to the old ways of doing things. Unfortunately, he did not grow up on the reservation and finds that the old way is not necessarily the best way. (Not Rated)

Wind River

Based on true events, Wind River tells the story of a young white boy named Nick who decides to live with a Shoshone tribe after running away from home and becomes one of the original riders of the Pony Express. (PG-13)
